

Making a Will

Recently at the Friendship afternoon there was a discussion about doing a will. Many felt they had little to leave and it was not worth doing a will. Others realised it is a way of leaving even small amounts of money or items to special people. Those who had received something in a friends or relation's will had felt honoured.

Most importantly it was suggested we write letters to our special, loved ones and place the letter with our will for them to read after our death. This letter could re-tell fun times had together, the joy at the birth of a child, appreciation for long and kind friendships and an expression of love, never a nasty or critical letter.

Janet Holdstock